

MOV

- But when no female arts his mind could move,
She turn'd to furious hate her impious love. Dryden's An.
What can thy mind to this long journey move,
Or need'st thou absence to renew thy love? Dryden.
4. To affect; to touch pathetically; to stir passion.
If he see aught in you that makes him like,
That any thing he fees, which moves his liking,
I can with ease translate it to my will. Shaksp. K. John.
It was great ignorance, Gloucester's eyes being out,
To let him live; where he arrives he moves
All hearts against us. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Should a shipwreck'd sailor sing his woe,
Would'st thou be mov'd to pity, or bestow
An alms? Dryden's Persius.
Images are very sparingly to be introduced; their proper place is in poems and orations, and their use is to move pity or terror, compassion and resentment. Felton on the Classics.
O let thy sister, daughter, handmaid, move
Or all those tender names. Pope.
5. To make angry.
From those bloody hands
Throw your distemper'd weapons to the ground,
And hear the sentence of your mov'd prince. Shakespeare.
They have mov'd me to jealousy. Deut. xxxii. 21.
6. To put into commotion.
When they were come to Bethlehem, all the city was mov'd about them. Ruth i. 19.
7. To conduct regularly in motion.
They, as they move
Their starry dance in numbers that compute Days, months, and years, tow'rd his all cheering lamp,
Turn swift their various motions. Milton.
- To MOVE, v. n.
1. To go from one place to another.
I look'd toward Birnam, and anon, methought,
The wood began to move.
Within this three mile may you see it coming;
I say a moving grove. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
In him we live, move, and have our being. Acts xvii. 28.
Every moving thing that liveth shall be meat for you. Gen.
On the green bank I sat and listen'd long,
Nor till her lay was ended could I move,
But wish'd to dwell for ever in the grove.
The senses represent the earth as immoveable; for though it do move in itself, it rests to us who are carried with it. Glan.
This saying, that God is the place of spirits, being literal, makes us conceive that spirits move up and down, and have their distances and intervals in God, as bodies have in space. Locke.
When we are come to the utmost extremity of body, what is there that can put a stop, and satisfy the mind, that it is at the end of space, when it is satisfied that body itself can move into it? Locke.
Any thing that moves round about in a circle in less time than our ideas are wont to succeed one another in our minds, is not perceived to move, but seems to be a perfect entire circle of that matter. Locke.
- The goddess moves
To visit Paphos, and her blooming groves. Pope's Odyssey.
2. To walk; to bear the body.
See great Marcellus! how inur'd to toils
He moves with manly grace, how rich with regal spoils. Dryden's An.
3. To go forward.
Through various hazards and events we move To Latium. Dryden's An.
4. To change the posture of the body in ceremony.
When Haman saw Mordecai that he stood not up, nor mov'd for him, he was full of indignation. Ezra v. 9.
- MOVABLE, adj. [from move.]
1. Capable of being moved; not fixed; portable; such as may be carried from place to place.
In the vast wilderness, when the people of God had no settled habitation, yet a moveable tabernacle they were commanded of God to make. Hooker, b. v.
When he made his prayer, he found the boat he was in moveable and unbound, the rest remained still fast. Bacon.
Any heat whatsoever promotes the ascent of mineral matter, which is subtle, and is consequently moveable more easily. Woodward's Nat. Hist. p. iv.
Any who sees the Teverone must conclude it to be one of the most moveable rivers in the world, that is so often shifted out of one channel into another. Addison on Italy.
2. Changing the time of the year.
The lunar month is natural and periodical, by which the moveable festivals of the Christian church are regulated. Hobder.
- MOVABLES, n. f. [meubles, Fr.] Goods; furniture; distinguished from real or immoveable possessions: as, lands or house.
- We seize
The plate, coin, revenues, and moveables, Whereof our uncle Gaunt did stand possessor. Shaksp.

MOU

- Let him that moved you hither,
Remove you hence; I knew you at the first
You were a moveable. Shaksp. Taming of the Shrew.
—Why, what's a moveable?
—A joint stool. Shaksp. Taming of the Shrew.
Surveys rich moveables with curious eye,
Beats down the price, and threatens still to buy. Dryden.
- MOVABLENESS, n. f. [from moveable.] Mobility; possibility to be moved.
- MOVABLY, adv. [from moveable.] So as it may be moved.
His back-piece is composed of eighteen plates, moveably joined together by as many intermediate skins. Grew.
- MOVABLES, adj. Unmov'd; not to be put out of the place.
The lungs, though untouched, will remain moveables as to any expansion or contraction of their substance. Boyle.
The Grecian phalanx, moveable as a tow'r,
On all sides batter'd, yet resists his power. Pope's Iliad.
- MOVEMENT, n. f. [mouvement, French.]
1. Manner of moving.
What farther relieves descriptions of battles, is the art of introducing pathetic circumstances about the heroes, which raise a different movement in the mind, compassion and pity. Pope's Essay on Homer.
Under workmen are expert enough at making a single wheel in a clock, but are utterly ignorant how to adjust the several parts, or regulate the movement. Swift.
2. Motion.
MOVING, adj. [movens, Latin.] Moving.
If it be in some part movant, and in some part quiescent, it must needs be a curve line, and so no radius. Grew's Cof.
- MOVING, n. f. [movers, Lat.] That which moves another.
That there is a motion which makes the vicissitudes of day and night, sense may assure us; but whether the sun or earth be the common mover, cannot be determined but by a further appeal. Glauville's Sep.
- MOVING, n. f. [from move.]
1. The person or thing that gives motion.
O thou eternal mover of the heav'ns,
Look with a gentle eye upon this wretch. Shakespeare.
The strength of a spring were better assisted by the labour of some intelligent mover, as the heavenly orbs are supposed to be turned. Wilkins's Math. Magic.
2. Something that moves, or stands not still.
You as the soul, as the first mover, you Vigour and life on ev'ry part bestow. Waller.
So orbs from the first mover motion take,
Yet each their proper revolutions make. Dryden.
3. A proposer.
See here these movers, that do prize their honours
At a crack'd drachm; cushions, leaden spoons, Ere yet the fight be done, pack up. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
If any question be moved concerning the doctrine of the church of England express'd in the thirty-nine articles, give not the least ear to the movers thereof. Bacon.
- MOVING, participial adj. [from move.] Pathetic; touching;
adapted to affect the passions.
Great Jupiter,
The moving pray'r of Æacus did grant,
And into men and women turn'd the ant. Blackmore.
- MOVINGLY, adj. [from moving.] Pathetically; in such a manner as to seize the passions.
The choice and flower of all things profitable in other books, the Psalms do both more briefly and more movingly express, by reason of that poetical form wherewith they are written. Hooker, b. v.
- I would have had them writ more movingly. Shaksp.
His air, his voice, his looks, and honest soul,
Speak all so movingly in his behalf,
I dare not trust myself to hear him talk. Addison's Cato.
- MOUGHT, for might. Obsolete.
- MOULD, n. f. [mugel, Swedish.]
1. A kind of concretion on the top or outside of things kept, motionless and damp; now discovered by microscopes to be perfect plants.
All moulds are inceptions of putrefaction, as the moulds of pies and flesh, which moulds turn into worms. Bacon.
Moss is a kind of mould of the earth and trees, but may be better sort'd as a rudiment of germination. Bacon.
Another special affinity is between plants and mould, or pu-trefaction; for all putrefaction, if it dissolve not in arefaction, will, in the end, issue into plants. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
The malt made in Summer is apt to contract mould. Mort.
A hermit, who has been shut up in his cell in a college, has contracted a sort of mould and rust upon his soul, and all his airs have awkwardness in them. Watts.
2. [Mole, Saxon.] Earth; soil; ground in which any thing grows.
Those moulds that are of a bright chestnut or hazel colour are accounted the best; next to that, the dark grey and russet moulds are accounted best; the light and dark ash-colour are reckoned the worst, such as are usually found on common or heathy

MOU

- heathy ground: the clear tawny is by no means to be approved, but that of a yellowish colour is reckoned the worst of all; this is commonly found in wild and waste parts of the country, and for the most part produces nothing but goss, furz, and fern. All good lands after rain, or breaking up by the spade, will emit a good smell; that being always the best that is neither too unctuous or too lean, but such as will easily dissolve; of a just consistence between sand and clay. Miller.
Though worms devour me, though I turn to mould,
Yet in my flesh I shall his face behold. Sandy's Paraph.
The black earth, every-where obvious on the surface of the ground, we call mould. Woodward.
3. Matter of which any thing is made.
When the world began,
One common mass compos'd the mould of man. Dryden.
Nature form'd me of her softest mould,
Enfeebled all my soul with tender passions,
And sunk me even below my weak sex. Addison's Cato.
4. [Mold, Spanish; moule, French.] The matrix in which any thing is cast; in which any thing receives its form.
If the liturgies of all the ancient churches be compared, it may be easily perceived they had all one original mould. Hooker, b. v.
A dangerous precedent were left for the casting of prayers into certain poetical moulds. Hooker, b. v.
French churches all cast according unto that mould which Calvin had made. Hooker.
My wife comes foremost; then the honour'd mould
Wherein this trunk was fram'd. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
New honours come upon him,
Like our strange garments cleave not to their mould,
But with the end of use. Shaksp. Macbeth.
You may have fruit in more accurate figures, according as you make the moulds. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 502.
- The liquid ore he drain'd
Into fit moulds prepar'd; from which he form'd
First his own tools: then what might else be wrought Futile, or grav'n in metal. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.
We may hope for new heavens and a new earth, more pure and perfect than the former; as if this was a refiner's fire, to purge out the dross and coarse parts, and then cast the mass again into a new and better mould. Burnet.
Sure our souls were near allied, and thine
Cast in the same poetick mould with mine. Dryden.
Here in fit moulds to Indian nations known,
Are cast the several kinds of precious stone. Blackmore.
4. Cast; form.
No mates for you,
Unless you were of gentler, milder mould. Shakespeare.
William earl of Pembroke was a man of another mould, and making, and of another fame, being the most universally belov'd of any man of that age; and, having a great office in the court, he made the court itself better esteem'd, and more reverenced in the country. Clarendon.
- Learn
What creatures there inhabit, of what mould,
Or substance, how endu'd, and what their pow'r,
And where their weakness. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ii.
So must the writer, whose productions should Take with the vulgar, be of vulgar mould. Waller.
From their main-top joyful news they hear
Of ships, which by their mould bring new supplies. Dryd.
Hans Carvel, impotent and old,
Married a lass of London mould. Prior.
5. The future or contexture of the skull.
To MOULD, v. a. [from the noun.] To contract concreted matter; to gather mould.
In woods, in waves, in wars she wants to dwell,
And will be found with peril and with pain;
Ne can the man that moulds in idle cell
Unto her happy mansion attain. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
There be some houses wherein sweet meats will relent, and baked meats will mould, more than in others. Bacon.
- To MOULD, v. a. To cover with mould; to corrupt by mould.
Very coarse, hoary, moulded bread the soldiers thrust upon their spears, railing against Ferdinand, who made no better provision. Knoles's Hist. of the Turks.
- To MOULD, v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To form; to shape; to model.
I feel
Of what coarse metal ye are moulded. Shaksp. Henry VIII.
Here is the cap your worship did bespeak;
Why this was moulded on a poringer,
A velvet dish; fie, fie, 'tis lewd. Shakespeare.
The king had taken such liking of his person, that he resolved to make him a master-piece, and to mould him plato-nically to his own idea. Wotton's Buckingham.
Did I request thee, Maker! from my clay
To mould me man?
Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.
He forgeth and mouldeth metals, and builds houses. Halt.

MOU

- By the force of education we may mould the minds and manners of youth into what shape we please, and give them the impressions of such habits as shall ever afterwards remain.
Atterbury's Sermons.
- Then rose the seed of chaos, and of night,
Of dull and venal a new world to mould,
And bring Saturnian days of lead and gold. Dunciad, b. iv.
A faction in England, under the name of puritan, moulded up their new schemes of religion with republican principles in government. Swift.
- For you alone he stole
The fire that forms a manly soul;
Then, to compleat it ev'ry way,
He moulded it with female clay. Swift's Miscel.
Fabellus would never learn any moral lessons till they were moulded into the form of some fiction or fable like those of Æsop. Watts's Improvement of the Mind, p. i.
2. To knead: as, to mould bread.
MOVABLE, adj. [from mould.] What may be moulded.
The differences of figurative and not figurative, mouldable and not mouldable, are piebald notions. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
- MOULDER, n. f. [from mould.] He who moulds.
To MOULDER, v. n. [from mould.] To be turned to dust; to perish in dust; to be diminished.
If he had fat still, the enemies army would have mouldered to nothing, and been exposed to any advantage he would take. Clarendon, b. viii.
Whatsoever moulders, or is washed away, is carried down into the lower grounds, and nothing ever brought back again.
Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
Those formed stones despoiled of their shells, and exposed upon the surface of the ground, in time decay, wear, and moulder away, and are frequently found defaced, and broken to pieces. Woodward's Nat. Hist. p. v.
- To them by smiling Jove 'twas giv'n, Great William's glories to recall,
When statues moulder, and when arches fall. Prior.
Finding his congregation moulder every Sunday, and hearing what was the occasion of it, he resolv'd to give his parish a little Latin in his turn. Addison's Spect. No. 221.
- To MOULDER, v. a. [from mould.] To turn to dust; to crumble.
The natural histories of Switzerland talk of the fall of those rocks when their foundations have been mouldered with age, or rent by an earthquake. Addison on Italy.
With nodding arches, broken temples spread,
The very tombs now vanish'd like their dead;
Some felt the silent stroke of mould'ring age,
Some, hostile fury. Pope.
- MOULDINESS, n. f. [from mouldy.] The state of being mouldy.
Flesh, fish, and plants, after a mouldiness, rottenness, or corrupting, will fall to breed worms. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
- MOULDING, n. f. [from mould.] Ornamental cavities in wood or stone.
Hollow mouldings are required in the work. Mason.
- MOULDWARP, n. f. [mols and jeoppan, Saxon.] A mole;
a small animal that throws up the earth.
Above the reach of loathful sinful lust,
Whose base effect through cowardly distrust
Of his own wings, dare not to heaven flie,
But like a mouldwarp in the earth doth lie. Spenser.
While they play the mouldwarps, unfavoury damps diffem-per their heads with annoyance only for the present. Carew.
With gins we betray the vermin of the earth, namely, the fichat and the mouldwarp. Walton's Angler.
- MOULDY, adj. [from mould.] Overgrown with concretions.
Is thy name mouldy?
—Yea.
—'Tis the more time thou wert us'd.
—Ha, ha, ha; most excellent: things that are mouldy lack use. Well said, Sir John. Shaksp. Henry IV.
The marble looks white and fresh, as being exposed to the winds and salt sea-vapours, that by continually fretting it preserves itself from that mouldy colour which others contract.
Addison's Remarks on Italy.
- To MOULT, v. n. [muyten, Dutch.] To shed or change the feathers; to lose feathers.
Some birds upon moulting turn colour, as Robin-red-breasts, after their moulting, grow to be red again by degrees. Bacon.
Time shall moult away his wings,
E'er he shall discover
In the wide whole world again
Such a constant lover. Suckling.
The widow'd turtle hangs her moulting wings,
And to the woods in mournful murmur sings. Garth.
- To MOUNCH, } v. a. [mouch, to eat much. Ans. This word To MAUNCH, } is retained in Scotland, and denotes the ob-tund action of toothless gums on a hard crust, or any thing eatable: it seems to be a corruption of the French word manger. Macbean.
A sailor's wife had chestnuts in her lap,
And mouncht, and mouncht, and mouncht. Shaksp. Macbeth.
Mound.